Cevap 16 'Asr stresses reflection on later phases and divine favor, while Maghrib stresses departure, death, and awakening from heedlessness.	Cevap 15 All three times make a person remember deeper spiritual realities beyond the clock time itself.	Cevap 14 They teach that passing time should lead a believer to remember Allah, the shortness of worldly life, and the greater realities still to come.	Cevap 13 Worldly life is temporary and will come to a complete end.
Cevap 20 His overpowering authority and mighty control.	Cevap 19 It suggests that the opportunity for trial and action does not last forever.	Cevap 18 Because the ending of the day naturally points to larger endings and to the breaking apart of the world as we know it.	Cevap 17 Maghrib.
Cevap 24 It reminds a person that life, like the day, moves toward an end.	Cevap 23 To connect that prayer time with an important period in sacred history and to show that times of day can point to major stages in human experience.	Cevap 22 It teaches the student to notice connections to aging, history, and Allah's kindness.	Cevap 21 These prayer times are not only parts of the day; they are signs that remind believers of Allah's mercy, power, majesty, and the temporary nature of this world.
