Cevap 4 Their benefits, their duties or roles, and their constant renewal.	Cevap 3 Living beings are not only created and caused to die, but also continuously fed and regulated.	Cevap 2 It leads him to recognize the existence of a majestic and merciful divine ruler.	Cevap 1 He noticed many different sea creatures living in an orderly and well-sustained way.
Cevap 8 The visible area for storing water there appears far too small compared with the river's enormous output.	Cevap 7 The Nile is given as the example, and it turns Egypt's dry land into a place of great fertility.	Cevap 6 It means their reality and abundance cannot be fully accounted for by the outward factors we see.	Cevap 5 It describes them as being preserved and sent forth in an extraordinary way.
Cevap 12 It suggests that Allah brings complex life and nourishment from simple means.	Cevap 11 It portrays marine life as carefully sustained, regulated, and subject to a precise life cycle.	Cevap 10 It gives the impression of a highly ordered realm full of living beings under careful governance.	Cevap 9 Because their visible storage capacity is too small in proportion to the river's immense output.

Cevap 16 It serves as a concrete case showing that a great river's lasting abundance exceeds what its apparent physical sources seem able to support.	Cevap 15 The main idea is that their true source is tied to an unseen generosity greater than material appearances suggest.	Cevap 14 It suggests that rivers are bestowed as gifts from Divine compassion and generosity.	Cevap 13 The sea is emphasized as a realm of living order, while rivers are emphasized for their usefulness, service, and ongoing replenishment.
Cevap 20 The wide variety of animals, their ordered condition, and their ongoing provision support it.	Cevap 19 He observed many kinds of animals being provided for and governed with remarkable order.	Cevap 18 It means the tradition captures a real spiritual insight about the river's dependence on unseen Divine mercy.	Cevap 17 It compares the vast volume of water it releases with the much smaller apparent capacity of the mountains where it begins.
Cevap 24 It suggests an unseen, non-material, and inexhaustible source beyond what appears outwardly.	Cevap 23 They ultimately come from the mercy of the Lord of glory and generosity.	Cevap 22 They reveal that rivers are gifts of mercy from the Lord, not merely products of blind nature.	Cevap 21 He concludes that a powerful, glorious, merciful, and beautiful Lord is managing and enlivening them.
